Chatham's two-year college needs are served by Danville Community College (DCC). The college provides quality credit and non-credit comprehensive higher education and workforce training programs and services, promoting individual, business, and community growth and development. Their open admissions policy, affordable cost, financial aid resources and flexible class schedules are some of the many reasons why students choose DCC.

DCC, founded in 1967, is governed by the State Board for Community Colleges. DCC is a two-year comprehensive community college offering certificates, diplomas, and associate degrees in more than 50 programs of study.
